He became a soldier, and he led a very good and holy life, a life such as Christ's own soldiers should lead. He was sent to the city of Amiens in France. It was the depth of winter, and the snow lay thick upon the ground, and young Martin was riding with his companions through the city. They were all very merry and very happy, and, when a poor old beggarman passed them, and entreated them to take pity upon him and help him, all of them passed on--all but one--and that one was Martin. Already he had given away all the money he had, but he felt he could not turn away from the poor, half-starved, half-clothed old man. What could he do? Another minute, and he took his sword, and cut his soldier's cloak in two, and gave half of it to the beggar. Then he followed his companions, and I daresay they laughed at him for what he had done; but a brave soldier does not mind being laughed at, and Martin did not think of the old man any more. Of course he felt a little cold with only half a cloak instead of a whole one on that winter's day; but the feeling that he had done a kind action must have made him very happy, and prevented him from thinking of the discomfort. The next night, when he was asleep he saw in...
